Original content: The post claims I (Soul, owner of Legion Killfeed) mocked and "laughed at" the author and that my service was a "waste of money." The name used in the post ("Saul") is a misspelling, but it is clearly directed at me and my business. The named poster "Adam Cooper" does not appear anywhere in my customer, subscriber, payment, or server records, and I have no interaction history with this person. This was posted in a space where the moderation staff have explicitly stated they dislike/hate me, which increases the likelihood of biased handling and pile-on behavior.

How Facebook got it wrong: This is targeted bullying/harassment and a false statement of fact designed to damage my reputation. It aligns with an ongoing harassment campaign linked to this same Facebook community/page, which has repeatedly posted defamatory content about me, including calling me a pedophile and making other extreme accusations. The account that posted this appears to be a very low-credibility account (around 11 friends), and the timing matches the broader pattern of coordinated smear posts. Leaving this up rewards fabricated "review" content and encourages repeat harassment.

Why it's important: I operate a legitimate business that depends on trust. Allowing demonstrably false, hostile posts to remain causes real-world harm: lost customers, continued harassment, and safety risks. It also harms the wider community by normalizing targeted smear posts and discouraging fair participation.
