Ray Smith just updated a review

Hi Anthony Brodie,

Ray Smith has updated their 1-star review of killfeed.co:

I am writing this updated review is engaging in deceptive practices to suppress genuine customer feedback. After I posted an honest, negative review about my actual experience with them, the owner chose to falsely claim that I am a business competitor using a fake name to sabotage them. This is a complete lie. Intentionally making false claims to flag and take down legitimate customer feedback directly violates many things however my previous statement of the FTC and American policy IS NOT ACCURATE as a business address isn't available google lists as American manipulating reviews to hide poor ratings is considered an unfair and deceptive trade practice either way. I have already submitted my official, redacted proof of purchase and identity documents directly to Trustpilot to prove I am a legitimate customer. Potential customers should avoid this business at all costs; any company that resorts to lying and violating federal review regulations to bury poor ratings cannot be trusted. Apologies google could only bring up this is a us based company however it is not correct it is in fact Australian
